"5. Calls upon the Secretary-General in collaboration with the regional commissions to develop a standardized questionnaire with a focused set of indicators on all critical areas of concern as a framework to assist national Governments in their assessment of and reporting on the implementation of the Beijing Platform for Action;

Action adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights,⁵² and the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women,⁵³

Noting that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights prohibits discrimination and proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights, and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, including distinction based on sex,

Noting also that the States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights have the obligation to ensure the equal right of men and women to enjoy all economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, and concerned, however, that despite these various instruments extensive discrimination against women continues to exist,

Gravely concerned that in many countries the treatment accorded to women, whether in terms of property rights, land rights, rights of inheritance, laws related to marriage and divorce or the rights to acquire nationality, manage property or seek employment, reflects the inequality between women and men,

Concerned that in situations of poverty, women are disproportionately affected and have the least access to productive resources, food, health, education, training and opportunities for employment and other needs,

Recognizing that land is a valuable resource, and that secure land rights are key rights for the economic empowerment of women,

Recognizing also that the full and equal participation of women in all spheres of life is essential for the full and complete development of a country,

Reaffirming the equal rights of women and men, as enshrined, inter alia, in the Charter of the United Nations and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

1. Stresses the need for full and urgent implementation of the rights of women, as guaranteed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women;

2. Urges all States to take all necessary measures, including legislation, to ensure the full development and advancement of women for the purpose of guaranteeing them the exercise and enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms on a basis of equality with men, and to take effective action against violations of those rights and freedoms;

3. Calls upon States:

(a) To set goals and develop and implement gender-sensitive strategies for addressing the rights and needs of women;

⁵³ Report of the Fourth World Conference on Women, Beijing, 4-15 September 1995 (United Nations publication, Sales No. 96.IV.13), chap. I, resolution 1, annexes I and II.

(b) To generate social support to change the social and cultural patterns of conduct of women and men with a view to achieving the elimination of prejudices and customary and all other practices that are based on the inferiority or the superiority of either of the sexes or on stereotyped roles for women and men;

(c) To develop innovative activities at all levels, including human rights education, to increase women's awareness of their human rights and the mechanisms that are available to protect and enforce women's full enjoyment of them, inter alia, through the translation, production and dissemination of information materials on these rights to all sectors of society;

(d) To ensure women's equal rights with men in the areas of education, health and nutrition, and to provide equal access to programmes of continuing education, including adult and functional literacy programmes;

4. Urges States to pay particular attention to women and their rights and needs in designing and implementing development programmes, and specifically to address the feminization of poverty and its root causes, including secure land tenure;

5. Also urges States to design and revise laws to ensure that women are accorded full and equal rights to own land and other property, including through the right to inheritance, and to undertake administrative reforms and other necessary measures to give women the same right as men to credit, capital, appropriate technologies, access to markets and information;

6. Calls upon the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, in the exercise of her mandate, to increase awareness that land rights discrimination is a violation of human rights and that in addressing the right to development secure land tenure for women should be taken into account;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Coordination, to ensure that all organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, individually and collectively, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, take into account land rights discrimination and its negative impact on women in all poverty eradication programmes and policies;

8. Calls upon all States and all relevant organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-third session on initiatives related to the present resolution.

Resolution 42/2. Release of women and children taken hostage in armed conflicts, including those subsequently imprisoned*

The Commission on the Status of Women,

Recalling its resolutions 39/2 of 31 March 1995, 40/1 of 22 March 1996 and 41/1 of 21 March 1997,

Recalling also the relevant provisions contained in the instruments of international humanitarian law relative to the protection of women and children in areas of armed conflict,

* For the discussion, see chap. III, paras. 51-52.

Welcoming the adoption of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action by the Fourth World Conference on Women,⁵⁴ including the provisions regarding violence against women and children,

Expressing grave concern at the continuation of armed conflicts in many regions throughout the world and the human suffering and humanitarian emergencies they have caused,

Emphasizing that all forms of violence committed against the civilian population, including women and children in areas of armed conflict, including capturing them as hostages, seriously contravene international humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,⁵⁵

Expressing its strong belief that the rapid and unconditional release of women and children taken hostage in areas of armed conflict will promote the implementation of the noble goals enshrined in the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action,

1. Condemns violent acts in contravention of international humanitarian law against civilian women and children in areas of armed conflict, and calls for an effective response to such acts, including the immediate release of such women and children taken hostage, including those subsequently imprisoned, in armed conflicts;

2. Strongly urges all parties to armed conflicts to respect fully the norms of international humanitarian law in armed conflict and to take all necessary measures for the protection of these women and children and for their immediate release;

3. Urges all parties to conflicts to provide unimpeded access to specialized humanitarian assistance for these women and children;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and all relevant international organizations to use their capabilities and efforts to facilitate the release of these women and children;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, taking into account the information provided by States and relevant international organizations, a report on the implementation of the present resolution, for submission to the Commission on the Status of Women at its forty-third session.

Resolution 42/3. Violence against women migrant workers*

The Commission on the Status of Women,

Recalling all resolutions relevant to women migrant workers adopted by the General Assembly, in particular Assembly resolution 52/97 of 12 December 1997,

* For the discussion, see chap. III, paras. 53-57.

the Commission on the Status of Women, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, as well as the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women,⁵⁶

Recalling also the outcome of major world conferences, specifically those pertaining to women migrant workers,

Emphasizing the need for objective comprehensive, broad-based information and a wide exchange of experiences and lessons learned by individual Member States and civil society in the formulation of policies and strategies to address the problem of violence against women migrant workers,

Noting the large numbers of women from developing countries and some countries in transition who continue to venture forth to more affluent countries in search of a living for themselves and their families as a consequence of poverty, unemployment and other socio-economic conditions, and acknowledging the duty of the sending States to work for conditions that provide employment and security for their citizens,

Acknowledging the economic benefits that accrue to sending and receiving countries from the employment of women migrant workers,

Recognizing the importance of continued cooperation at the bilateral, regional and international levels in protecting and promoting the rights and welfare of women migrant workers,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the thematic issues before the Commission on the Status of Women;⁵⁷

2. Invites concerned Governments, particularly of sending and receiving countries, to include in their national action plans information on the problems of women migrant workers;

3. Encourages concerned Governments, particularly of sending and receiving countries, to avail themselves of the expertise of the United Nations, including the United Nations Statistics Division and other relevant bodies such as the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women, to develop appropriate national data-collection methodologies that will generate comparable data on violence against women migrant workers as bases for research and analyses on the subject;

4. Invites Governments, in cooperation with relevant United Nations bodies, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, to undertake further research on the causes and consequences of violence against women migrant workers;

5. Invites concerned States parties, particularly of sending and receiving countries, to include in their periodic reports to relevant human rights treaty bodies, updated and comprehensive information on actions they have taken to address the problem of violence against women migrant workers;

6. Invites Member States and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the proposed database of good practices and lessons learned on all forms of violence against women, information on bilateral and multilateral agreements, national experiences and lessons learned, initiatives and projects that have proved viable and effective in evolving national strategies and strengthening bilateral, regional and international cooperation for dealing with violence against women migrant workers;

7. Calls upon concerned Governments, particularly of sending and receiving countries, if they have not done so, to put in place penal and criminal sanctions to punish perpetrators of violence against women migrant workers and, to the extent possible, to provide victims of violence with the full range of immediate assistance, such as counselling, legal and consular assistance, temporary shelters and other measures, that will allow them to be present during the judicial process, as well as to establish reintegration and rehabilitation schemes for returning women migrant workers;

8. Encourages Member States to consider ratifying and complying with International Labour Organization conventions and to consider signing and ratifying or acceding to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families;⁵⁸

11. Requests the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Development Fund for Women and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system, within the context of the country cooperation and development assistance framework, to support national measures, in both sending and receiving countries, designed to strengthen preventive action, in particular education and information campaigns to increase awareness of the issue of violence against women migrant workers, and to ensure adequate briefing and training of prospective women migrant workers on the laws, culture, working and living conditions, possible problems, coping mechanisms and support services in the receiving countries;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the relevant provisions contained in the present resolution in preparing, for submission to the General Assembly at its fifty-fourth session, the report on the problem of violence against women migrant workers requested by the Assembly in paragraph 10 of its resolution 52/97.

Resolution 42/4. Older women and support systems: gender and caregiving*

The Commission on the Status of Women,

Aware that gender difference in life expectancy rises with age and that therefore two thirds of the very old are women,

Aware also that, traditionally, women are relied upon as caregivers at all ages and that they make an essential but often unrecognized and unremunerated contribution to society and the economy,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on older women and support systems: new challenges,⁵⁹ based on the report and recommendations of the Expert Group Meeting on Caregiving and Older Persons: Gender Dimensions, held in Malta from 30 November to 2 December 1997, which underscored that:

(a) Changes in the traditional support systems affect women and men differently;

(b) Urbanization has weakened the traditional support systems for older persons;

(c) There are growing numbers of women who, as the primary caretakers, are entering the labour market;

(d) Because women live longer than men, they are more likely than men to live alone in old age: in most countries, widows outnumber widowers;

(e) Older women are more likely than men to be poor;

(f) Older women face a higher risk of chronic illness and disability; female advantage in life expectancy is often offset by disability;

(g) Older women's contributions to the well-being of their families, communities and the economy are widely overlooked,

1. Takes note of the recommendations made in the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Invites Member States to consider implementing, at the national level, as appropriate, the recommendations contained in the annex to the present resolution, which are based on the report of the Secretary-General and the views expressed in the Commission by Member States;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account these recommendations when preparing his report to the Commission at its forty-third session, as requested in its resolution 41/2, on key global issues regarding the differential impact of population ageing on men and women.

* For the discussion, see chap. III, paras. 58-59.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON CAREGIVING AND OLDER PERSONS: GENDER DIMENSIONS

A. Research

So far, there is a lack of expertise and research on support systems for older persons from a gender perspective. National and international statistical and research institutes should:

- (a) Disaggregate all data by age and sex;
- (b) Analyse the needs of older persons and caregivers from a gender perspective;
- (c) Pay special attention to the situation of older women and men in developing countries and carry out research on how support systems affect women and men differently;
- (d) Analyse the consequences of changes in pensions and health care based on gender and age;
- (e) Develop a methodology to measure the value of women's unpaid labour.

B. Economic security

Women in all parts of the world are more likely than men to be poor. Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental institutions should:

- (a) Ensure that women at all stages of life have access to employment, social protection systems and income equal to that of men;
- (b) Value the important contributions older women make to development;
- (c) See that particular attention is paid to efforts to eliminate the gender gap in income;
- (d) Eliminate discrimination against women in pension funds that are based on the principle of continuous employment;
- (e) Ensure that older women have access to credit and income-earning possibilities;
- (f) Involve men and women equally at all levels when designing and implementing economic policies that affect older persons.

C. Education and empowerment

The level of formal education and participation in public life of older women is much lower than that of men. Governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental institutions should:

(a) Ensure that throughout their lives, girls and women have equal access to education and vocational training, and promote women's self-esteem at all stages of life;

(b) Promote lifelong learning on the part of women, provide possibilities for training and retraining, and equip older women with knowledge of modern and traditional technologies so they remain in the mainstream of society;

(c) Promote a positive image of older women in political and economic decision-making through mass media and education in order to ensure older women's autonomy and productivity;

(d) Give special attention to the situation of older women in the context of the International Year of Older Persons (1999).

D. Well-being of caregivers

Women as caregivers are in demand. In order to support caregivers, Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental institutions should:

(a) Attach higher value to unpaid caregiving labour and be aware that caregiving is not in unlimited supply;

(b) Ensure that the demand put upon women as caregivers does not increase disproportionately in relation to that put upon men;

(c) Provide caregivers with opportunities for occasional respites from their duties and provide caregivers with various services, such as housekeeping help, self-help groups, specialized counselling and training;

(d) Promote an equal sharing and better reconciliation of working, employment and caregiving responsibilities between men and women;

(e) Consider providing financial assistance to informal caregivers;

(f) Support women and men who combine paid work and elder care with measures such as flexible working arrangements, family leave for the care of older dependent family members, and reintegration of caregivers after a career break;

(g) Offer a variety of alternative services to older people, such as home care and day-care centres.

Resolution 42/5. Fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights*

The Commission on the Status of Women,

Recalling, on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,⁶⁰ that the Universal Declaration reiterates the principle of the equal rights of women and men contained in the Charter of the United Nations, and entitles everyone to the rights and freedoms set forth in the Universal Declaration without distinction on the basis of sex,

Recalling also that gender mainstreaming is a key strategy for achieving equality between women and men and the full enjoyment of all human rights by women,

1. Calls upon the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and the United Nations system as a whole to ensure that the human rights of women form an integral part of all activities in the commemoration of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and are also especially addressed through targeted activities;

2. Recommends that all activities for the commemoration should address the human rights of women, with a view to achieving common understanding and awareness on the promotion and protection of all human rights of women by, for instance, inviting gender experts to participate or contribute and devoting specific attention to the theme "Human rights of women";

3. Also recommends that specific activities be undertaken to highlight the human rights of women such as the analysis of obstacles in the realization of their rights;

4. Encourages Member States, as well as other actors in the human rights field, to also mainstream a gender perspective into their commemorative activities.

The Working Group held six meetings.

ACTION TAKEN BY THE COMMISSION

Report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women

3. At the 11th meeting (a closed meeting), on 11 March, the Commission considered the report of the Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women (E/CN.6/1998/CRP.6).
4. At the same meeting, the Commission took note of the report of the Working Group and agreed to include it in the report of the Commission. The report of the Working Group is as follows:
 - "1. The Working Group on Communications on the Status of Women was guided in its deliberations by the mandate given in Economic and Social Council resolution 76 (V) of 5 August 1947, as amended by Council resolutions 304 I (XI) of 14 and 17 July 1950 and 1983/27 of 26 May 1983.
 - "2. The Working Group considered the confidential list of communications (E/CN.6/1998/SW/COMM.LIST/32 and Add.1) and the non-confidential list of communications concerning the status of women (E/CN.6/1998/CR.34).
 - "3. The Working Group took note of the nine confidential communications received directly by the Division for the Advancement of Women of the United Nations Secretariat and of the 27 communications that formed the confidential list received by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of the United Nations Office at Geneva. It also took note of the fact that no confidential communications had been received from other United Nations bodies or specialized agencies. It considered three non-confidential communications. At the request of one Government, the Working Group agreed to postpone consideration of one confidential communication until the forty-third session of the Commission on the Status of Women.
 - "4. Regarding the confidential communications, the Working Group expressed its deep concern in relation to the systematic and grave violation of women's human rights, including violations of women's and girls' rights to security; to life and liberty; to freedom of movement, freedom of thought and freedom of expression; and to the right to assemble.
 - "5. The Working Group was further concerned at the alleged use of massive arbitrary arrest, incommunicado detention, detention of minors, torture, refusal of a fair trial to political opponents and prisoners, and the use of forced exile. The Working Group was also specifically concerned at the abusive treatment of women with impunity by security forces, including military and police forces, and by other governmental authorities. That abusive treatment included rape and sexual abuse of women in detention and in camps for detained migrant workers.

"6. The Working Group also expressed its deep concern over the mass punishment of women residents in areas targeted by security forces and the cruel and degrading treatment of women by soldiers, including gang rape and sexual slavery.

"7. The Working Group was gravely concerned about the allegedly increasing gross violations of the human rights of women, including patterns of arbitrary and extrajudicial killings, kidnappings, disappearances and disappearances after arrest, death in police custody, and also trafficking in women and girls.

"8. The Working Group noted with concern the widespread repression in the context of conflict situations which resulted in gross human rights violations that sometimes amounted to genocide, leading to physical and psychological abuses of women, including rape.

"9. The Working Group expressed its concern at harmful traditional practices, such as female genital mutilation, which continued in certain States, and also noted with concern the practices of forced abortion and sterilization.

"10. The Working Group further noted the alleged harassment to which human rights defenders had been subjected by members of the police and other authority figures.

"11. The Working Group noted with concern the continued discrimination against indigenous families, including women and children who had been forcefully evicted from their homes and land and moved to unknown places. It also noted with concern the discrimination against minorities, in particular the denial of their rights to education and to the enjoyment of their religious and cultural life.

"12. The Working Group noted with grave concern the gross and consistent violations of the social, economic and cultural rights of women as reflected in the continued discrimination against women in the spheres of employment, education and health, including malnutrition.

"13. The Working Group further noted with concern the continuing de facto discriminatory treatment of women as reflected in limited employment opportunities, forced retirement during pregnancy and after childbirth, and the absence of child-care leave for part-time workers with time-limited employment - a majority of whom were women.

"14. The Working Group took note of the alleged specific cases of discrimination and harassment, including physical and sexual assault, verbal and non-verbal abuse, unprovoked and improper obscene comments, psychological abuse, intimidation and threats of bodily harm, shunning and exclusion from employee gatherings.

"15. In considering the non-confidential communications, the Working Group took note of the continued absence of women in decision-making processes, particularly in the context of conflict prevention and resolution.

"16. The Working Group expressed appreciation to Governments for having sent replies conducive to the clarification of the cases concerned. It noted, however, that some Governments had not replied. The Working Group urged the Commission to encourage all Governments concerned to send their replies and to cooperate in order to improve the communication mechanism.

"17. With reference to the criteria used in selecting the communications to be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women, the Working Group reiterated that the content of communications must refer to women and to women's issues only - that is, to injustices or discriminatory acts or practices against women."

SUMMARIES OF THE PANEL DISCUSSIONS ON THE CRITICAL AREAS OF CONCERN

A. Chairperson's summary

1. Member States, United Nations organizations and non-governmental organizations made statements during the general debate, held on 2, 3 and 6 March 1998, on agenda item 3 (c), Follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women: implementation of strategic objectives and action in the critical areas of concern.
2. Delegates reported on actions taken to implement the Beijing Platform for Action, including specific national action plans that had been formulated for that purpose, which in some cases were elaborated on with assistance from organizations of the United Nations system from specific countries. They underlined the importance of strengthening national and international efforts to follow up on the Beijing Conference, emphasizing that the Platform for Action had become an important frame of reference for action at the national level for the advancement of women and the achievement of gender equality. While priorities differed, depending on the situation in a given country, the human rights of women and the elimination of violence against women tended to be common priorities. Countries that had not formulated national plans to follow up on the Platform for Action were urged to do so by the year 2000.
3. Representatives emphasized the importance of pursuing a policy of gender mainstreaming for equality and the empowerment of women. A number reported on recently formulated gender policies and on the establishment of national mechanisms for the advancement of women, including integration of gender equality goals into development policies, such as a white paper on women's advancement, integration of a gender perspective into a reconstruction and development plan, and gender mainstreaming in federal development plans. Others noted the establishment of monitoring and oversight mechanisms to oversee activities for the advancement of women, sometimes in collaboration with non-governmental organizations and other actors in civil society.
4. The need for development assistance from the international community for national efforts to implement the Platform for Action was underscored.
5. Several representatives emphasized the urgency of stepping up efforts to collect statistical data disaggregated by sex and on gender-specific indicators. Some reported progress in that regard, including the development by one country of a set of economic gender-equality indicators which provided benchmarks of women's and men's economic realities that were often overlooked.
6. A number of delegates recommended continued close cooperation between the Commission on the Status of Women and the Commission on Human Rights and their secretariats. One representative called for further rationalization of the work of the Commission on the Status of Women to ensure that, in its decisions and recommendations, it addressed only the central issues.
7. Several representatives expressed views on the proposals for a high-level review in the year 2000 of the implementation of the Nairobi and Beijing strategies. Preference to convene the review as a special session in May or June in the year 2000 was expressed, and the importance of the preparatory process was emphasized. The substantive framework for the review needed to be established as soon as possible and should provide for active contributions from the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, and United Nations funds and programmes. Delegates welcomed the prospect of the African regional conference, to be convened by the Economic Commission for Africa in 1999.

8. A number of representatives thanked the Division for the Advancement of Women for the preparation of high-quality reports and endorsed the recommendations in the reports of the expert group meetings, convened by the Division in partnership with other institutions, on gender-based persecution, adolescent girls and their rights, and promoting women's enjoyment of their economic and social rights. The previous Bureau of the Commission was commended for its efforts inter-sessionally to prepare for the Commission and its panel discussions.

B. Human rights of women: Moderator's summary

9. On 3 March 1998, at the 4th meeting, the Commission held a panel discussion, followed by a dialogue, on the human rights of women, one of the critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action. The panellists were: Rose M. Migiro (United Republic of Tanzania), Head, Department of Civil and Criminal Law, University of Dar es Salaam; Cecilia Medina (Chile), member, Human Rights Committee; Shanthi Dairiam (Malaysia), Director, International Women's Rights Action Watch in Asia and the Pacific; and Shelagh Day (Canada), Special Adviser on Human Rights, National Association of Women and the Law.

10. Participants noted that the Beijing Platform for Action reaffirmed that all human rights were universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and that the human rights of women and girls were an inalienable, integral and indivisible part of universal human rights. Building on the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action and taking it further, the Platform stressed that enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms by women and girls was a priority for Governments and the United Nations and was essential for the advancement of women. The Platform underlined the importance of gender analysis in addressing the systemic and systematic nature of discrimination against women.

11. Women's enjoyment of their human rights required a holistic approach to, and a better understanding of, women's human rights, including violations thereof, and Governments had primary responsibility for ensuring women's full enjoyment of their rights. A compartmentalization of rights - for example, of civil and political rights, on the one hand, and economic, social and cultural rights, on the other - was not in keeping with the spirit of fundamental human rights and not conducive to achieving women's equality, advancement and empowerment, since development and human rights complemented each other.

12. Although progress had been made in many countries in achieving women's de jure equality, women's de facto lack of, or limited enjoyment of, human rights was particularly visible in their economic inequality, which contributed to women's poverty. That constituted a significant obstacle to women's economic empowerment and to development. Women's enjoyment of human rights would strengthen democracy and contribute to more accountable and transparent government.

13. Representatives cited factors contributing to women's lack of enjoyment of human rights, including the continuing prevalence of discriminatory cultural norms and traditions, national laws, including customary laws, inconsistent with international human rights norms, harmful traditional practices, and women's high levels of illiteracy and consequent marginalization and exclusion. Trends such as globalization, market liberalization and privatization had had an impact on women's enjoyment of their human rights as well, contributing to the changing role of the State, including its decreasing ability to deliver social services.

14. Some participants noted that indigenous, disabled, refugee and ethnic minority women, elderly women and single mothers were among the most vulnerable. Women in poverty or precarious economic situations were increasingly becoming victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation. Migrant women workers were susceptible to multiple forms of discrimination.

15. Equal access to rights, equal opportunities for the enjoyment of rights, and equal treatment in that enjoyment remained to be achieved in areas such as health and health care, education, work and employment, and participation in public life. Widespread discrimination against women persisted with regard to ownership of land, property and inheritance rights and access to economic resources such as credit and agricultural extension services, all of which were among the essential means for women to overcome poverty. Discrimination in marriage, family and nationality laws also persisted. Violence against human rights activists and defenders of women's rights further inhibited progress. Religious fundamentalism had also often led to a denial of rights to women.

16. There was general agreement that knowledge of rights was an important starting point for improving enjoyment of rights. Restrictive and traditional interpretations and applications of human rights law from a male perspective affected the ways in which women experienced rights or violations thereof. Clarifying the scope and content of human rights from a gender perspective required a new approach on the part, inter alia, of international human rights treaty bodies. It also required that States parties, in their regular reporting to those bodies, include gender-specific information.

17. Human rights education, research and broad-based awareness-raising of women's human rights were needed, along with efforts to reach illiterate and disadvantaged women. Men also needed to be targeted for increased awareness. The role of non-governmental organizations and civil society was pivotal in the protection and promotion of women's human rights.

18. At the national level, legislative change was necessary but not sufficient. Constant and critical monitoring of legal provisions was required to determine their impact on women's enjoyment of their rights. International human rights law and jurisprudence provided guidance and incentives for domestic legislative reform. The impact of, and change brought about by, other measures also needed to be monitored over the long term.

19. Some representatives emphasized that the availability of strong and independent national institutions for promoting the enjoyment of rights, including remedies for violations, was essential for the realization of women's rights. Such institutions should allow diverse groups of women to share their experience and should thus lead to an enriched understanding of factors that affected the enjoyment of rights.

20. At the international level, the establishment of an international criminal court was viewed favourably by a number of delegations, and there was support expressed for making gender-based persecution and trafficking in women and girls an integral part of the court's mandate and for ensuring gender expertise and gender balance throughout the court. Human rights bodies and mechanisms, including the Commission on Human Rights, also needed to develop greater expertise on women's human rights issues. The Commission's catalytic role in that regard could facilitate such efforts, and women's non-governmental organizations could increase their visibility at and contributions to such mainstream forums in order to shape their agendas. An optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, with broad standing for individuals and groups, was seen by many representatives as an essential step in strengthening the Convention.

21. Several speakers noted that a gender perspective needed to be mainstreamed into all human rights activities and machineries at the national and international levels. More and better data collection, more systematic use of data, and more research on women's human rights issues were essential. Women's human rights needed to be an integral part of the development of economic, trade and fiscal policies. It was stated that economic indicators providing benchmarks of women's and men's economic realities, which were often overlooked, should be developed.

22. As a matter of principle, a call for action was made to address violations of women's and girls' human rights in particular countries, including Afghanistan. Concern was expressed about the situation of women and children in Algeria and Palestine and for Palestinian women, who remained refugees and were unable to return to their homeland. The human rights impact of the embargo on women in Iraq was also mentioned.

C. Violence against women: Moderator's summary

23. At the 8th meeting, on 5 March 1998, the Commission held a panel discussion on violence against women, one of the critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action. Presentations were made by the panellists: Barbara Prammer (Austria), Federal Minister for Women's Affairs and Consumer Protection; Bonnie Campbell (United States of America), Head of Violence against Women, Office of the Justice Department; Maria Lisbeth Guevara (Venezuela), Coordinadora de la Comisión de Legislación, Consejo Nacional de la Mujer; and Radhika Coomaraswamy (Sri Lanka), Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women.

24. Participants in the panel discussion and the dialogue recalled that the Beijing Platform for Action had identified violence against women as a priority concern of the international community and had defined it, in line with the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women (General Assembly resolution 48/104), as an act of gender-based violence occurring in public or private life. The Platform for Action emphasized the need to take integrated measures to prevent and eliminate violence against women and to study the causes and consequences of violence and the effectiveness of preventive measures.

25. Participants emphasized that violence and fear of violence in public and private life remained one of the main concerns of women worldwide. Violence continued to be an obstacle to the achievement of equality, development and peace, since it had a direct impact on women's economic, social and political participation. Thus, violence against women in all its forms constituted a flagrant violation of women's human rights, which could only be tackled through a multidisciplinary and coordinated approach.

26. Gender-based violence which resulted in or was likely to result in physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women affected the corporal integrity of women. It was emphasized that the elimination of violence against women was therefore linked to other human rights guarantees, including the right to life, freedom from torture, detention and arbitrary arrest, and the Geneva Conventions.

27. All forms of gender-based violence against women had a devastating effect on women and their families, in particular their children, and brought with it the risk of a continuous cycle of violence between generations, focused on groups of women, including women with disabilities, migrant women and women in prostitution.

28. It was noted that trafficking in women had become an integral feature of transnational organized crime. International cooperation was needed to address the issue of trafficking and to punish those involved in organizing and profiting from it. In several instances, regional cooperation in that regard had started, and national task forces had been established. It was underlined that the problem of trafficking should be dealt with along the lines set out by the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, which had not yet been ratified by all countries.

29. Recently, many Governments had given the elimination of violence against women top priority, as reflected in the many national action plans established in the follow-up to the Fourth World Conference on Women. In addition, several countries had elaborated specific action plans to combat gender-based violence, involving non-governmental organizations. At the international level, activities carried out by existing mechanisms, including the Commission on the Status of Women, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice, the Commission on Human Rights and reports of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, were praised.

30. Mention was made of good practices in the fields of appropriate assistance, management and communication, and prevention, investigation and prosecution, which involved social, educational, medical, judicial, law enforcement, and migration authorities as well as non-governmental organizations. There was consensus that legal action and reform of the criminal and civil justice systems were critical. It was essential that perpetrators be confronted with the consequences of their behaviour and held accountable. It was noted that some countries had introduced legislation that made it possible to remove the violent offenders from the family home, instead of accommodating victims and children in shelters.

31. Gender training for law enforcement officers and other personnel, relevant governmental agents and officials was considered important in order to sensitize the criminal justice system regarding violence against women. In some countries, special examination kits were provided to the police for collecting forensic evidence from women. It was emphasized that the full participation of women in the development and execution of laws was required and that there was need for more gender-sensitive women police officers, prosecutors and judges. Training of health and social workers, teachers and counsellors was also necessary in order to ensure that they would be able to identify crimes of violence committed against women and girls. Effective partnership between the police and non-governmental organizations working on violence was considered crucial.

32. Various steps had been taken to make women aware of the existing problem, to ensure their safety and to give assistance. Shelters and emergency helplines, which provided support and protection to victims, existed in many countries. Greater restrictions on access to weapons was being considered in some countries. Witness protection schemes using protective court orders had been introduced and were necessary for protecting, in particular, female victims of trafficking and rape during war. Multidisciplinary teams made up of medical doctors, social workers, psychologists, health workers, teachers, volunteers and non-governmental organizations were providing legal assistance and social services. The valuable assistance given by non-governmental organizations in providing legal and psychological counselling was acknowledged.

33. To raise public awareness and to break the silence and taboos surrounding violence, public awareness campaigns on the impact of violence were considered essential. Many community education campaigns were being carried out, aimed at changing community attitudes towards violence, introducing "zero tolerance" for violent behaviour, and promoting non-violent methods of conflict resolution. Teacher training and the development of curriculum material to address gender-based violence in schools were mentioned. Media campaigns could encourage women to file complaints instead of hiding the problem. At the same time, the portrayal of violence in the media perpetuated violence and continued to have negative effects, especially on children.

34. Many obstacles remained, and the gap between de jure and de facto implementation persisted, since most women seemed not to seek help from crisis services or the police, because of ignorance, fear or shame. Many women were not aware of existing laws or their rights and frequently had no access to the judicial system, especially if they were poor, illiterate or migrants. It was deplored that the real extent of violence against women remained hidden as well as unreported. Random surveys suggested that the extent of the problem was much greater than estimated. Consequently, it was difficult to design adequate policies and offer sufficient services to victims. The lack or inadequacy of data available made it difficult to assess the nature, severity and effects of violence against women and to better understand its causes. The academic community needed to conduct more research on the causes and consequences of violence against women and on the economic costs that accrued to countries because of such violence. It was regretted that there were so few impact studies on steps taken to combat violence against women.

35. With regard to the rehabilitation of perpetrators, programmes had been carried out in a number of countries, with varied success. Most programmes focused on the role of men, emphasizing positive new role models for men and new types of male/female relationships in the family. It was important to change patriarchal values and to create a non-violent culture. However, in view of the scarcity of funds, assistance to victims of violence had to be the priority and needed to be seen as a moral obligation.

36. Participants also recalled the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and stressed the need for concrete follow-up, including studies on the impact of measures to eliminate violence against women and to assist the victims, and it was proposed that mechanisms were needed to monitor follow-up on violence against women, including good practices.

D. The girl child: Moderator's summary

37. At the 5th meeting, on 4 March 1998, the Commission held a panel discussion on the girl child, one of the critical areas of concern in the Platform for Action, and heard presentations by the following panellists: Lina Laigo (Philippines), Secretary, Department of Social Welfare and Development, and Chairperson, Council for the Welfare of Children; Sadig Rasheed (Sudan), Director, Programme Division, United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF); Paloma Bonfil Sanchez (Mexico), Secretaria Ejecutiva, Grupo Interdisciplinario sobre Mujer, Trabajo y Pobreza (GIMTRAP); and Margaret Vogt (Nigeria), Senior Associate, International Peace Academy.

38. Following the panel discussion, 16 government delegations participated in a dialogue. Two girls, sponsored by the non-governmental organization Committee for UNICEF/Working Group on Girls, and representatives of a non-governmental organization caucus also spoke.

39. Speakers recalled that the Beijing Platform for Action recognized that women in many countries faced discrimination from the earliest stages of life. They also recognized that discrimination and neglect in childhood could initiate a lifelong downward spiral of deprivation and exclusion. The Platform for Action had called upon Governments, the United Nations system and civil society to take urgent measures to eliminate all forms of discrimination against the girl child, including negative traditional and cultural attitudes and practices and discrimination with respect to education, skills development and training, health and nutrition, employment and family life. It recommended that Governments enact and enforce appropriate legislation and take actions that would ensure equal rights for girls and their full participation in development.

40. Since the Fourth World Conference on Women, a variety of policy measures and programmes specifically targeting the girl child had been introduced by countries, reflecting actions also proposed at recent United Nations conferences and summits and in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and various International Labour Organization (ILO) conventions and standards. Public awareness campaigns had been organized in various regions to sensitize people to the specific needs and concerns of girls. National legislation had been reviewed and modified to protect girls. Stereotypes in teaching materials had been removed in some countries, and teachers were being given gender training. Affirmative action had been used to increase the number of female entrants to colleges and universities.

41. Representatives stressed that the empowerment of the girl child was critical not only for eliminating gender-based discrimination but for personal growth. Human rights instruments, especially the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child, obliged States parties to make efforts to protect the rights of the girl child and to eliminate discrimination. The two conventions were viewed by some delegates as interrelated, and measures had been taken to implement them in a coordinated and complementary way. However, in order to be more effective, it was proposed that the two conventions be widely disseminated in local languages and incorporated into national laws.

42. Education was referred to as the most important tool for girls' empowerment and, in that connection, many participants expressed concern at the high drop-out rate among girls, compared with boys. A support system needed to be in place to help girls complete their education and to prevent the sexual harassment of girls in schools. The paucity of role models for girls in textbooks was noted.

43. Reference was made to prevailing negative cultural and traditional attitudes and practices that often stood in the way of equal treatment of girls. Some of those attitudes and practices, combined with traditional role models maintained by families, discouraged girls' career development, their participation in social and political life, and their access to recreational activities and sports. A preference for sons continued in many countries, leading to discrimination against girls, often even before birth, and to such practices as female infanticide and prenatal sex selection.

44. The situation of girls living in poor economic conditions was mentioned by a number of speakers. Those girls were often the most marginalized. They were often forced to take up low-paid work or to become prostitutes. They often became domestic workers, were paid very little, and were subjected to abuse and exploitation.

45. In rural areas, unpaid domestic work was frequently expected from girls, preventing them from going to school or developing skills suited to income-earning activities. Moreover, their contribution to household work was often undervalued. Since globalization contributed to the further impoverishment of rural areas in many developing countries, out-migration by adults had increased and had led to an increase in girls' domestic labour and responsibilities.

46. In traditional cultures, families generally maintained the traditional roles of males and females. Since the empowerment of girls started in the family, families needed to recognize the rights and specific needs of the girl child beyond the traditional cultural framework.

47. The particular needs of adolescent girls resulting from the transitional and developmental nature of their physical and emotional states were acknowledged. Adolescent girls and boys needed to be given adequate information on sexual and reproductive health, and it was necessary to help counsellors who dealt with adolescents to be gender-sensitive. It was also important for national Governments and the international community to recognize that the health needs of girls were generally different from those of boys. Traditional practices that were harmful to girls' health, such as female genital mutilation, should be eliminated. Adolescent girls should be empowered and supported by their families and communities to take control of their physical well-being and educational attainment.

48. Reference was made to girls affected by armed conflict and to refugee girls. Where the family system was no longer functioning, many children were left without parents or primary caregivers. Concerns were expressed that girls in such circumstances were particularly vulnerable to rape and sexual violence, for example, in refugee camps or when fleeing their home countries.

49. Personnel involved in peacekeeping and humanitarian activities should be sensitized to the specific needs of girl children and should not exploit them. Attention was drawn to young girls' serving as soldiers, a phenomenon that seemed to be on the increase and one on which more data and research were required.

50. Much concern was expressed about trafficking and the sexual abuse of girls, including the growing sex industry, and on child pornography, including the use of the Internet in that regard. Rehabilitation of the victims of sexual abuse and trafficking needed to be organized by trained personnel. Mechanisms at the national and international levels to prosecute and punish the perpetrators were also urgently needed, whether their offences were committed in their own or in a foreign country.

E. Women and armed conflict: Moderator's summary

51. On 4 March 1998, at the 6th meeting, the Commission held a panel discussion on women and armed conflict, followed by a dialogue. The panellists were: Helga Hernes (Norway), Special Adviser on Peacekeeping and Preventive Diplomacy, Royal Ministry of Foreign Affairs; Rafiga Azimova (Azerbaijan), Head, Research Centre of the Council of Women; Bernard Muna (Cameroon), International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994; and Hina Jilani (Pakistan), advocate, Supreme Court of Pakistan.

52. Representatives noted that the Beijing Platform for Action emphasized that peace was inextricably linked to equality between women and men, but that aggression, foreign occupation, ethnic conflict and other types of conflict were an ongoing reality, affecting women and men in nearly every region. They recalled that, building on the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the Platform for Action had stressed that violations of the human rights of women in times of armed conflict were violations of fundamental principles of international human rights and humanitarian law and emphasized that the implementation of cooperative approaches to peace and security was urgently needed. Noting the consequences of armed conflict for women, which included internal displacement and refugee flight, the speakers stressed the crucial role of women in the maintenance and promotion of peace and security and the preservation of social order in times of armed conflict. They also reiterated the Platform for Action's emphasis on the importance of all forms of education to foster a culture of peace, tolerance and respect for diversity and stressed the critical role of an active and visible policy of mainstreaming a gender perspective into all policies and programmes to address armed conflict or other conflicts.

53. It was noted that contemporary armed conflict affected civilians disproportionately. Most conflicts were fought within, rather than between, States and were no longer fought exclusively by professional soldiers. Non-State actors, including paramilitaries and vigilantes, increasingly threatened the security of civilians, particularly women and children. Reduced tolerance for ethnic, religious and cultural diversity and decreased respect for the right to self-determination brought about instability. The easy availability of small arms, including landmines, to non-State actors had heightened the possibilities of civilian insecurity and risk, especially for women and children, during both conflict and post-conflict, in, inter alia, refugee camps and camps for the internally displaced.

54. Representatives noted that, although entire communities were affected by and suffered the consequences of armed conflict, women and girls were particularly affected because of their status in society and their sex. They suffered many forms of abuse during armed conflict, but were particularly vulnerable to sexual abuse, rape, sexual mutilation, sexually humiliating treatment, forcible impregnation, sexual slavery and forced marriages. Sexual violence was commonly used as an instrument of war. Sexual violence brought with it the risk of human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and pregnancy. Women have been forced to bear and raise the children of their aggressors or forced to raise rejected orphans. Women have also experienced the trauma of being shamed in the eyes of their communities, of losing relatives and friends in times of armed conflict, and of having to take responsibility for the care of surviving family members.

55. Representatives recalled that armed conflicts, civil strife and foreign occupation had resulted in internal displacement and refugee flows, with women and children comprising the majority of those who were internally displaced or refugees. Displaced and refugee women faced the risk of abuse during flight, in refugee camps and in countries of ultimate refuge, from the military, paramilitaries, bandit gangs and male refugees.

56. Camps for the internally displaced and refugees had sometimes become the site of continuing conflict and, in the absence of structures to preserve law and order, had served to shield the activities of warring groups. Displaced and refugee women in camps faced other difficulties, including lack of physical security and privacy, difficulties relating to health, and lack of suitable occupation and income-generating opportunities. Humanitarian workers were sometimes insensitive to the needs of women in camps, and that circumstance underlined the importance of gender balance among such workers and mainstreaming a gender perspective into their activities. Representatives noted the importance of training all security workers in international human rights and humanitarian principles and the participation of women in all areas, as civilian and military peacekeepers, peace-builders and as special representatives of the Secretary-General. National armed forces should be well acquainted with international human rights and humanitarian principles as well as gender perspectives. The increased participation of women at all levels of national armed forces should be a specific goal.

57. Breaches of international humanitarian and human rights law affecting women required a particularly effective response and should not be marginalized during post-war reconstruction. Speakers emphasized the importance of justice at the international and national levels to provide the foundation for national reconciliation. Delegates stressed that the statute of the proposed international criminal court should provide for the prosecution of violations of the human rights of women during conflict and should specifically address sexual violations. National legal systems should also be reviewed in order to ensure that they provided justice for women who had been affected by armed conflict. The importance of procedural and evidentiary safeguards and of strengthened support for victims was also emphasized by representatives. Representatives encouraged support for trust funds for women victims of armed conflict.

58. Many representatives emphasized the potential of women as agents of preventive diplomacy, peacekeeping and peace-building. Noting that women should not be viewed primarily as the victims of armed conflict, delegates noted that the participation of women in peacekeeping missions had positive results and that their participation should be secured in all relevant areas, particularly in modern multifunctional peacekeeping operations. Innovative strategies to encourage women's participation in peace processes, refugee camps and their reconstruction, and post-conflict resolution were crucial, and concrete steps were necessary to ensure that women were appointed as special representatives of the Secretary-General. Close connections with grass-roots and local initiatives with regard to peace-building were also essential.

59. Representatives stressed that sustained and energetic efforts to avert the occurrence of conflict were required, along with short-term and long-term strategies to develop a culture of peace. Formal and informal education should incorporate values emphasizing the morality of peace, a tolerance of diversity, gender-sensitivity and respect for human rights. Governments and civil society, including the media, should develop programmes involving women relating to peace education and conflict prevention and resolution, and girls and women should be encouraged to speak as women, rather than as representatives of other interests.

General exchange of views

14. At the 1st meeting, on 2 March, the Working Group, at the invitation of the Chairperson, held a general exchange of views on item 5 of the agenda of the Commission.

15. Delegations recalled that the conclusion of an optional protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women was a commitment of both the 1993 World Conference on Human Rights (Vienna) and the 1995 Fourth World Conference on Women (Beijing). They noted that the year 1998 marked the fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and that it was five years since Governments had adopted the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action. They pointed out that the adoption of an optional protocol to the Convention would make 1998 the year of women's human rights, thereby giving real meaning to the anniversary.

16. Delegations stressed the importance of concluding a strong protocol that would take account of the difficulties faced by women in accessing legal remedies for violations of their human rights but that would at the same time build on existing and widely accepted principles. The importance of concluding a strong, well-drafted text that could be widely accepted was emphasized.

17. Several delegations suggested that standing requirements should be broad, and there was also a suggestion that, although the protocol should be based on other instruments, it should contribute to the progressive development of international law. Accordingly, it was suggested that specific provisions relating to interim measures and follow-up should be included in the text. A number of delegations stressed the usefulness of an investigations procedure.

18. Several delegations were of the view that it was vital not to allow reservations to the protocol.

ACTION TAKEN BY THE WORKING GROUP

19. At the 4th meeting, on 13 March, the Working Group adopted its draft report (E/CN.6/1998/WG/L.1), as orally corrected. It agreed that the revised draft optional protocol contained in document E/CN.6/1998/WG/L.2, as orally revised during informal consultations, should be included in its report to the Commission (see appendix I to the present annex).

20. At the same meeting, the Working Group had before it, in document E/CN.6/1998/WG/L.3 and in an informal paper, a summary by the Chairperson of views and comments made by delegations during negotiations on a draft optional protocol, which was subsequently circulated in document E/CN.6/1998/WG/L.4.

21. At the 5th meeting, on 13 March, the Working Group decided to include the Chairperson's summary in its report to the Commission (see appendix II to the present annex).

2. Where the Committee exercises its discretion under paragraph 1, this does not imply a determination on admissibility or on the merits of the communication.

Article 6

1. Unless the Committee considers a communication inadmissible without reference to the State Party concerned, and provided that the individual or individuals consent to the disclosure of their identity or identities to that State party, the Committee shall bring any communication submitted to it under this Protocol [confidentially] to the attention of the State Party concerned.

In the event that at least one third of the States Parties favour such a conference, the Secretary-General shall convene the conference under the auspices of the United Nations. Any amendment adopted by a majority of the States Parties present and voting at the conference shall be submitted to the General Assembly of the United Nations for approval.
2. Amendments shall come into force when they have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and accepted by a two-thirds majority of the States Parties to this Protocol in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Appendix II

CHAIRPERSON'S SUMMARY OF VIEWS EXPRESSED AND COMMENTS MADE BY DELEGATIONS DURING THE NEGOTIATIONS ON THE OPTIONAL PROTOCOL TO THE CONVENTION ON THE ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

1. The Open-ended Working Group on the Elaboration of a Draft Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women held a number of informal meetings to continue negotiations on the optional protocol based on the results of a first reading of the draft which had been completed in 1997, and reflected in appendix I of annex III to document E/1997/27. The Working Group requested the Chairperson to prepare a summary of the discussions held during the informal meetings for inclusion in the report of the Working Group.

2. Throughout the informal meetings, the Working Group benefited from the comments of and replies to questions by Ms. Silvia Cartwright, a representative of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, who participated in the Working Group as a resource person in accordance with Economic and Social Council decision 1997/227. The Working Group also benefited from the comments of a member of the Human Rights Committee who provided the Working Group with information on the practice of the Human Rights Committee under its first Optional Protocol (to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights). The Working Group received information from a representative of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on technical aspects of the work and practice of human rights treaty bodies under similar procedures to those contained in the draft optional protocol, and from a representative of the Office of Programme Planning, Budget and Accounts of the United Nations Secretariat.

3. The following reflects the Chairperson's understanding of the discussions of the Working Group on the optional protocol, arranged on an article-by-article basis. Delegations requested amendments to the text from the floor, but the Chairperson wishes to note that this text was not negotiated, nor was it adopted by the Working Group.

Preamble

1. The Working Group agreed that the optional protocol would be preceded by a short, succinct preamble which reflected the international human rights framework of the United Nations. Delegations agreed that the preamble would note that the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights establish the principles of equality between men and women and the entitlement of all, without distinction based on sex and other grounds, to human rights. Delegations agreed that the preamble would recall the international covenants and other human rights instruments, including the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. It would reaffirm States parties' determination to ensure the full and equal enjoyment by women of all human rights and fundamental freedoms and to take effective action to prevent violations of these rights and freedoms. Some delegations suggested that the preamble should also recall that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action reaffirmed the universality, indivisibility and interrelatedness of all human rights and that it called for the introduction of the right of petition through the preparation of an optional protocol to the Convention.

Some delegations also suggested that the preamble should make reference to the Beijing Platform for Action. Others suggested that these documents be addressed in a resolution.

2. The Chairperson of the Working Group submitted a new draft of article 2 which was accepted by the Working Group as the basis for its further negotiations on this article.

3. Delegations agreed that the optional protocol should entitle individuals and groups of individuals to submit communications to the Committee. Some delegations were of the view that groups should be entitled to submit communications, while several suggested that organizations, including non-governmental organizations, should also be entitled to do so, as they also can be victims of human rights violations. Other delegations expressed the view that groups and organizations might participate in other human rights mechanisms.

4. Many delegations referred to the communications procedures in the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families which entitle communications to be submitted on behalf of complainants. The practice of the Human Rights Committee, reflected in its rules of procedure, was to receive communications submitted on behalf of victims. Many delegations took note of the explanation of the representative of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights with regard to the existing procedures under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Convention against Torture in relation to communications submitted in cases where victims are unable to submit communications themselves, or when victims give consent for the submission of communications by others. These delegations were of the view that this protocol should explicitly provide that communications could be submitted on behalf of complainants and that this element could be specified in the Committee's rules of procedure.

5. Several delegations were of the view that the parameters of the phrase "on behalf of" required clarification so as to preclude communications from unauthorized representatives with neither the consent of, nor a link to, victims. Several delegations suggested that clarification could be provided by limiting those who could claim submission of communications "on behalf of" victims to designated representatives.

6. Delegations agreed that it was important to indicate that the protocol would reflect existing communications procedures and provide that claimants should be subject to the jurisdiction of the relevant State party. Some suggested that designated representatives should also be subject to the State party's jurisdiction, while others suggested that this requirement was inappropriate.

7. Many delegations suggested that it was important to provide for communications concerning violation of rights set forth in the Convention through an act or failure to act by the State party. Other delegations were of the view that communications should be able to address violations of all the provisions of the Convention. Several delegations expressed the view that violation of rights of the Convention encompassed both acts and omissions and that a concise formulation referring to violation of rights or provisions of the Convention would be understood as including acts and the failure to act and was thus sufficient.

8. One delegation expressed the view that article 2 should include, as did the first Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, reference to the requirement of exhaustion of available domestic remedies which would also be addressed in article 4.

Article 3

9. Delegations recalled that article 3 of the draft optional protocol had been agreed by the working group ad referendum. Noting that article 1 of the first draft protocol had explicitly precluded reception of communications relating to States parties to the Convention that were not States parties to the protocol, delegations agreed to the addition of this formula in article 3 ad referendum.

Article 4

10. Delegations agreed that admissibility criteria would be reflected in two separate subparagraphs of article 4, that is to say, article 4 (1) would deal with the exhaustion of domestic remedies, and article 4 (2) would reflect the remaining criteria.

11. Delegations agreed to a negative formulation according to which the Committee would not consider a communication unless it had dealt with the question of exhaustion of domestic remedies, thereby making the subparagraph more succinct. Some delegations doubted whether current language on this matter as contained for example in the Convention against Torture was appropriate within the scope of the present protocol, and were in favour of a requirement that the author of a communication demonstrate the exhaustion of domestic remedies. Others noted that the exhaustion of domestic remedies was a standard provision in other human rights instruments, and its application should be determined within generally recognized principles of international law.

12. While delegations discussed various possibilities for reflecting inadmissibility because of an abuse of the right, several suggested that this element would be further specified by the addition of the criterion of vexatiousness. It was agreed to combine lack of substantiation and manifest ill-foundedness. However, both sets of criteria, as contained in article 4 (2) (iii) and (iv), remain in brackets, with the word "vexatious" also appearing in brackets. Delegations agreed to include admissibility criteria covering prior occurrence and prior, or simultaneous, consideration by another procedure of international settlement.

13. Some delegations, while emphasizing that the principles of objectivity and impartiality which they noted were important principles of international law, needed to be maintained in the consideration of communications by the Committee, suggested that, instead of those principles' being included as an admissibility criterion, they could be moved to another place within the protocol, for example, to a new article 7 (1). Other delegations noted that, while appreciating the removal of this aspect from article 4, they could not agree to its inclusion in article 7.

14. Delegations agreed to retain article 4 (1) and (2) as set out in document E/CN.6/1998/WG/L.2 with two sets of brackets in article 4 (1) and one set in the chapeau of article 4 (2), in addition to the sets of brackets around article 4 (2) (iii) and (iv). Several delegations suggested that a further paragraph should be added to the article that would provide for the consent of the victim of the violation for representative communications.

15. Some delegations considered it inappropriate for the Committee to request a State party to take interim measures, while many pointed out that this was in accordance with established practice of human rights treaty bodies, such as the Human Rights Committee. A formulation according to which the Committee may transmit to a State party a request for interim measures was acceptable to all delegations, especially since a similar approach was used in article 7 (transmittal of views). Delegations also noted that a State party was under a general bona fide obligation to give consideration to such a request of the Committee, and that this could be reflected in a shortened article 5 (1) with the deletion of article 5 (2).

16. While some delegations expressed a preference for the deletion of all three bracketed qualifications of situations that might justify the request for interim measures, all delegations agreed to the retention of the words "as may be necessary". Delegations agreed that a reference to the preservation of the status quo could be ambiguous, indicating preservation of a violation, and should therefore be deleted. While some delegations expressed a preference for the term "harm" in English, others pointed out that for translation into other languages, the use in English of the term "damage" would be preferable.

17. Delegations agreed that the use of interim measures did not imply a determination on the merits of a case, nor on its admissibility, and that this should be reflected in article 5 (2).

18. Article 5 (1) and (2) was retained by the Working Group, with the word "urgent" in article 5 (1) remaining in brackets.

Article 6

19. Many delegations expressed the view that the identity of the complainant should be revealed to the State party. It was noted that practical considerations required that the State party be informed of the identity of those submitting communications to allow for the provision of information to the Committee. Several delegations suggested that claimants should be able to decide whether their identities should be revealed to the State party.

20. Several delegations noted the changing practice of the Human Rights Committee in regard to confidentiality. Some delegations expressed a preference for deleting the confidentiality requirement from article 6 (1), but others expressed the view that, while a communication was pending, only the State party, the complainant and the Committee should be apprised of the proceedings and their content.

21. While some delegations expressed a preference for a three-month time limit for submission of information by the State party, all delegations agreed on a six-month period.

22. Several delegations expressed their support for the retention of the substance of article 6 (3) in the optional protocol. Other delegations suggested that the current language of article 6 (3) was inappropriate in a human rights instrument. Several noted that the provision suggested that the Committee had an arbitral role which they considered inappropriate. Others underlined that the thrust of this provision was to encourage reconciliation and mediation, rather than arbitration or quasi-judicial proceedings.

23. The Working Group agreed to retain article 6 (1), with the term "confidentially" remaining in brackets. Article 6 (2) was adopted ad referendum. Article 6 (3) remains unchanged.

Articles 7, 8 and 9

24. Many delegations suggested the deletion of the requirement that only written information may be used by the Committee in considering a communication, pointing in particular to the constraints that women in developing countries might face in this regard. Some suggested an explicit reference to recorded information. Others maintained that the procedure should be based on written information. While several delegations were of the view that the Committee should be entitled to receive information from "other sources" which would be transmitted to the State party and the author of the communication, others pointed to the importance of verifying these sources. Some delegations indicated that they could accept other sources if these were further specified.

25. Article 7 (2) had been agreed to ad referendum in 1997.

26. Some delegations expressed the view that article 7 (2) bis would encourage the dialogue between the Committee and the State party, and argued that a State party was entitled to be present at proceedings of the Committee involving that particular State party. Other delegations noted the resource implications of such a provision, which would also preclude authors of communications and their representatives' taking advantage of a similar opportunity. Several delegations noted that the Human Rights Committee did not grant States parties or complainants access to its proceedings.

27. Article 7 (3) was adopted ad referendum in a shortened version.

28. As many delegations recognized the desirability of setting out provisions on follow-up currently contained in articles 7 (3), 8 and 9, including alternatives, in a streamlined form, it was agreed to merge these articles and to delete the original drafts. Recognizing the need for both short- and long-term follow-up to the Committee's views and recommendations, if any, many delegations agreed that the State party should provide a first follow-up response to the Committee's views within six months on any action taken. In light of constraints that might be present in a State party, some delegations requested a qualification of the six-month time period. Others pointed out that since no detailed reply on completed actions would be required at this short-term stage, but that an indication of initiated action and planned steps would suffice, they could not agree to such a qualification. Delegations also affirmed that this article, including the time period for the submission of information to the Committee, would apply only to the follow-up phase after the Committee's adoption of views, and was not linked to article 5.

29. Delegations agreed that the Committee would have a long-term role in monitoring follow-up to its views on communications, including through the inclusion of relevant information in the periodic reports States parties are required to submit under article 18 of the Convention. Article 7 (5) was adopted ad referendum.

Article 10

30. Several delegations, while noting their support for an inquiry procedure, stated that, in their view, the Committee already had the power under its current mandate to deal with situations of serious or systematic violations. In this regard, they encouraged the Committee to develop its mandate under article 18 of the Convention, especially in regard to exceptional reports. It was also noted that the proposed inquiry procedure would strengthen and expand the Committee's mandate in this regard. Some doubt about the desirability of including an inquiry procedure in the optional protocol was also voiced.

31. As to whether an inquiry procedure could be based on the Committee's receipt of information about what was termed "serious [and] [or] systematic violation", several delegations stated that, while they preferred "or", they would also be able to accept "and". It was argued that the use of the word "or" would not achieve the objective of the inquiry procedure. Others were of the view that the reverse was the case. Single cases of violations could be serious, but they should be dealt with under the communications procedure. Those who supported the retention of "and" noted that in order for an inquiry by the Committee to be initiated, allegations of violations needed to be both serious and systematic.

32. Many delegations expressed the view that the words "with the consent of" in article 10 (2) and "the consent ... of" in article 10 (5) were redundant, while others emphasized the importance of this explicit requirement. Several delegations were of the view that a provision under this article allowing for visits to the territory of the State party should be retained, stressing that such visits could only take place with the agreement or consent of the State party.

Article 11 bis

33. Recognizing that while many delegations favoured the inclusion of an inquiry procedure in the optional protocol, others were reluctant to provide the Committee with such a mandate, the Chairperson introduced a provision according to which States parties would, upon signature, ratification or accession to the optional protocol, be in a position to declare that they did not recognize the competence of the Committee under its articles 10 and 11 (the so-called opt-out clause).

34. Delegations welcomed this proposal as a good basis for further discussions on articles 10 and 11. Some delegations proposed that, instead of an opt-out procedure, an opt-in procedure should be included. While noting their preference for an opt-in procedure, some also expressed their flexibility in this regard. Other delegations noted that in principle, and to ensure the integrity of the optional protocol, such a provision should not be required at all. In this regard, some delegations noted the link between this proposal and the issue of reservations and that they could only consider an opt-out procedure on the basis of a clause precluding reservations. Others suggested that the question of the opt-out provision should not be linked to the issue of reservations.

Article 12

35. Some delegations were of the view that article 12 of the protocol was not required because States parties to the protocol would be obliged to ensure that its procedures were accessible and to cooperate with the Committee and because the texts of existing international procedures did not include a similar provision.

36. Many delegations were of the view that an article emphasizing States' obligations in this regard was desirable, but that this article should be put in positive terms. Several delegations suggested that the State party should be called upon to cooperate in the effective exercise of the right to submit communications or information to the Committee. Others suggested that this right should be facilitated, promoted or supported. A number of delegations were of the view that it was undesirable to refer to the protocol as creating rights and it was preferable to provide that States parties would respect the procedure provided by the protocol.

37. Many delegations suggested that the protocol should provide that the State would cooperate with the Committee at all stages of its proceedings under the protocol, but noted that this obligation would be implied in the absence of such a provision.

38. Some delegations suggested that the protocol should explicitly provide that States parties would undertake to take appropriate steps to protect those using the protocol from interference and reprisal.

Article 13

39. Delegations recalled that article 13 had been adopted ad referendum.

Article 14

40. Many delegations stressed the importance of wide knowledge of and publicity for the protocol, its procedures and the conclusions of the Committee in this context. Several noted the importance of ensuring wide dissemination of the jurisprudence of the Committee. Several noted that provisions relating to knowledge of and publicity for treaties were not included in existing instruments providing communications procedures, while others noted that article 42 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child made such provision, as did the rules of procedure of the Human Rights Committee.

41. A number of delegations expressed the view that a simple formulation relating to publicity would be appropriate and that this should address the optional protocol and the Convention. Several expressed the view that this could be accommodated by mention of the protocol, which would be enough to make known its procedures.

42. Many delegations agreed that it was important for women to be aware of the Convention and the protocol, but cautioned against a provision that would involve onerous obligations, including of a financial nature, for States parties. Several delegations were of the view that a provision of this nature was unnecessary and inappropriate, and that States parties that had not been subject to the procedures set forth in the protocol should not have obligations with respect to publicizing proceedings.

Article 15

43. Several delegations noted that in light of article 19 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, article 15 of the protocol was redundant. Many delegations expressed the view that a specific reference to the Committee's powers with regard to rules of procedure should be included in the protocol for the purposes of clarity. Delegations adopted the article ad referendum.

Article 16

44. Possible implications of the adoption and entry into force of the optional protocol with regard to the Committee's requirements for meeting time and resources were discussed. In this regard, the financial regulations and rules of the United Nations, in particular those applying to the preparation of the proposed programme budget by the Secretary-General and its review and approval by the General Assembly following the consideration of the reports of the financial and budgetary committees, were noted. While there was recognition that to enter into any particular aspect of possible implications would be premature, it was pointed out that the Committee's responsibilities under the optional protocol would have implications for the Committee's meeting time. In this regard, it was suggested that the recent amendment of article 20 (1) of the Convention could be reflected in the optional protocol. Possible resource implications with regard to the Secretariat's servicing of the Committee would also have to be addressed by Member States in due course in accordance with established regulations and rules.

45. Note was taken of the proposed new paragraph on resources, introduced by the Chairperson, which restates article 17 (9) of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

46. Following consideration of the resource issues by the Working Group, a proposal was made by the Chairperson to remove provisions pertaining to resources, including meeting time, from the text of the optional protocol and to have these elements reflected in the resolution by which the finalized text of the protocol would be adopted. Pending further discussion, the paragraphs were retained in brackets.

Article 17

47. Delegations adopted article 17 of the draft protocol ad referendum.

Article 18

48. While several delegations expressed the view that the optional protocol should enter into force after the fifth instrument of ratification or accession was lodged with the Secretary-General, they were willing to join the many delegations who favoured entry into force after 10 ratifications or accessions. A number of delegations, arguing for consistency with the threshold established in the Convention, were of the view that 20 should be required.

Article 19

49. Several delegations were of the view that this provision was a restatement of article 29 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and suggested its retention. A number of delegations noted that an equivalent provision was not to be found in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women. Delegations agreed to delete this article from the protocol.

Article 20

50. Many delegations recalled that reservations to human rights treaties, consistent with the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and not incompatible with the object and purpose of the treaty, were permissible under international law and might be appropriate in certain circumstances.

51. Recognizing that the purpose of the protocol would be to assist women in realizing their rights under the Convention, but that there were, however, a large number of reservations to the Convention itself, many delegations supported the inclusion of an explicit provision prohibiting reservations, which they noted was also compatible with international law. The optional and procedural nature of the protocol was stressed, as well as the interrelationship among the provisions of the protocol, the effective functioning of which would be undermined if reservations to any of its provisions were permitted.

52. A number of delegations noted that, while several provisions of the protocol, such as article 11 bis, had been drafted to address the concerns of some delegations that might otherwise have resulted in reservations, several provisions of the protocol had been agreed to by a number of States on the understanding that a provision prohibiting reservations would be included. Some delegations expressed the view that if reservations were permitted, then article 11 bis, about which there was no agreement, would not be necessary, and more States might accept the competence of the Committee to conduct inquiries.

53. A number of delegations indicated that a prohibition of reservations could only be accepted when the balance of the protocol had been agreed. Several suggested that a provision prohibiting reservations might discourage States from ratifying or acceding to the protocol. Some delegations argued that certain States might be willing to accept all substantive obligations established by the protocol, but unable to accept minor obligations. In such cases, a provision precluding reservations would prevent such States from becoming party to the protocol. These delegations suggested the inclusion of a provision allowing for reservations permissible under the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties or the setting out of no provision relating to the issue, which would subject the protocol to the regime of that Convention and preclude reservations that were inconsistent with the protocol's object and purpose.

54. Several delegations acknowledged difficulties in respect of examining the question of reservations at the present stage of consideration of the protocol, but expressed the wish to address the issue once the draft protocol was consolidated. Several took note of the strong sentiments expressed in the Working Group with respect to the prohibition of reservations in light of the subject matter of the Convention and agreed to take these sentiments into account as the draft reached finalization.

55. A number of delegations noted that human rights treaties rarely contained explicit prohibitions of reservations and that no instruments establishing communications procedures incorporated such a provision. Noting that their Governments did not envisage specific reservations to the protocol, several delegations expressed serious concerns about the long-term implications of a complete prohibition of reservations in a human rights instrument. Despite these concerns, some delegations indicated a willingness to discuss a wide variety of options with respect to discouraging or otherwise limiting reservations to the protocol short of an absolute ban of the type contained in article 20.

56. A large majority of delegations argued, nevertheless, that the protocol was an exceptional case which justified a complete prohibition of reservations. Recalling that the underlying aim of the protocol was to assist women in realizing their rights under the Convention, those delegations stressed with great passion that reservations could defeat the purpose of the protocol.

Articles 21, 22, 23 and 24

57. Delegations adopted these articles ad referendum.
